THOSE RICH SENATORS.

It has become the custom of paragraphs of the public press to sharpen their Fabers on the rich Senators from our Pacific coast. Though, doubtless, the rich Senators can stand it, paragraphs should not be too hard on them. The possession of wealth is not in itself a crime, and in this country the architect of his own fortune is regarded before the scion who sprouted and grew up in the unhealthy shades of luxury.

Paragraphers should go slow on these rich Senators. Paragraphers should reflect that when they themselves have pre-empted all the brain of the country, it were unseemly to grudge a corresponding share of wealth in other quarters.

Brain will contend for, and does sometimes, secure wealth; but we have never reliably heard of a case of wealth amassing brain or wisdom. These rich Senators from the golden slope have achieved their own wealth, and it is just possible they did not find it in a heap. Give them the benefit of the doubt until roll call.

Paragraphers, too, should remember that rich men are the real representatives of a land whose hills are ribbed with everlasting golden bones, whose auriferous sands imprison the lucent rays of the sloping sun and piece out the shimmering twilight on the hills and vales.

We cannot all be great alike, neither can we be identically good all over this country. Doubtless Ben Butler represented Massachusetts in Congress, and the late John Morrissey represented his New York constituency.

One thing that can be said of the rich Senators from the western plane is, that accustomed to handling and owning immense values, they have been slow in accepting bribes. The lobby dare not shake its corrupting currency in their faces.

Of our senior Senator, a Philadelphia paper says:

"Senator Jones of Nevada has been conspicuous not less for his wealth than his culture, refinement and suavity in social life, and his quiet, unostentatious, dignified and statesmanlike grasp of public measures and measure of public men.

The Senate can profitably stand more statesmen of the Nevada Senator's qualifications, and will not grudge them his equality in wealth if they rival him in business capacity and integrity. 'Let us speak of a man as we find him.'"

A BOLD DEMAND.

Senator Fox's bill to divide the taxes collected from transportation companies among the several counties of this State is a bold way of telling the prosperous counties to walk to the captain's office and contribute their share to the support of bankrupt communities. Under the provisions of the tax bill Washoe would lose $17,000 per annum; Elko, $37,923 68; Churchill, $6,840 02; Lyon, $3,126 94; Lander, $3,407 53; Humboldt, $19,845 91. The injustice of such a bill is so patent that it needs no argument to kill it. The Enterprise advocates the passage of the bill, and contains the following:

We find that the counties to gain by the operation of the tax law control the majority of the Legislature. If each Senator and Assemblyman is looking out for the interest of his constituency the bill will go through both Houses. Upon the principle that the people in every county contribute toward the business of the railroad companies, there is no reason why any county should be denied its proportion of the taxes paid by the companies.

As well might the Enterprise say that San Francisco is entitled to a portion of Washoe revenues, from the fact that she comes here for potatoes. If the argument is good in one instance why not in the other? Why not claim a part of California's tax on the lumbering interest? This State has contributed to the support of that important industry

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Enterprise of this morning contains a leader constructed on the latest plan of Comstock journalism, for the sole use and benefit of Dennis McCarthy, editor of the Chronicle. It is pointed enough to prick the hardest place in a piece of pig iron. Whether Mr. McCarthy will take his medicine without declaring civil war remains to be seen. He will most likely gag if he undertakes to swallow it.

Sprague wants to be a candidate for Governor of Rhode Island, but the Democratic State Central Committee "won't have it."

The Legislature seem to be showing a disposition to give Senator Marker's bill to reclaim desert land the consideration the measure demands, and thoughtful investigation is making for it many friends.

IRISH AFFAIRS.

The English Government "Stoops to Conquer"—Kavanaugh the Informer once a New York Hackman.

NEW YORK, Feb. 22.

Kavanaugh, the cab-driver and informer, was for years a resident of Troy, N. Y., where he drove a hack in the employ of Patrick McKeon. He is believed to have returned to Ireland about eight years ago. A special London cable to-day says the acceptance of Carey's testimony on condition of giving him his life is a crowning disgrace for the Government and reveals the utter rottenness of the English system in Ireland. It is known that there was a sharp struggle at the Castle before it was finally decided to bring him forward as a witness. There were three different meetings of the Privy Council in Dublin, at which the question was discussed, and Crown Prosecutor Murphy's apology shows how keenly the humiliation of their position is felt by the castle officials. The reward expected by the government for this infamy is implication of the Land Leaguers, and Casey's evidence is carefully directed to that end. The fact that he is swearing to order stands out clearly in almost every sentence he utters. The probable result will be a far greater injury to the ministry than to Parnellites. Carey's statement that the murder was suggested by articles in the Free-man is due to an old and bitter hatred of Gray, who opposed several swindling schemes which the informer had concocted against the Dublin corporation shortly before the trial. It is known that Carey uttered threats of murder against Gray or he now seeks vengeance. The speeches in the House of Commons are singularly bitter in tone and party feeling is running high. The Irish party is thus enabled to maintain an attitude of reserve. Many attempts have been made to draw Parnell into an expression of opinion of the Dublin trial, but the Irish leader, having nothing to confess or conceal, maintains a dignified restraint.

WASHINGTON SCANDAL.

Insinuations Concerning the President and a Lady Friend—Remembered Assault Upon Arthur. [ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.

Two or three papers have within a few days published scandalous stories about the President. They are scandalous insinuations. They dared not go farther than insinuate. There are no facts known to any one to justify these insinuations. The President has shown some attentions to the wife of an official high in one of the departments, which have been enough to set the tongues of male and female gossips to wagging in a sly and sub rosa way. The President's intimacy with the family of the lady has long been known and often spoken of. It includes the entire family, and there is no evidence of any indiscretion about it. He has made early and informal calls at the house of the lady in question, and it has frequently been stated in Washington correspondence that there was no attempt at secrecy. The lady's husband and her father, who is in even a higher position than her husband, remained on the most intimate personal and official terms with the President. At the races some time ago the lady and her husband were in attendance, but he went with gentlemen friends and she went with the President. Nothing could have been less clandestine, and the fact that her husband attended the races should have prevented any club-room talk or tea-party gossip; but the prominence of the parties made the subject a fascinating one for certain persons, and so there have been unpleasant guesses and surmises passed around among the wives of officials at their receptions, and by the wives passed over to their husbands, and by them related in club rooms. No one professes to know anything discreditable to the distinguished persons whose reputations are trifled with. They have only heard somebody say something or other. This kind of talk has been passed around in an underhanded way for many months. During that time no facts have come to light and nothing has occurred to strengthen suspicions, but stories of that kind all grow by association, and at last newspapers published some vague allusions to the matter. A special to the Baltimore American contains a highly-colored account of an alleged disgraceful scandal in which President Arthur and Assistant Secretary of State John Davis are mentioned as the principal actors. It is rumored to-day that this trouble culminated this afternoon in an assault upon the President by Davis. It has, however, been impossible to trace the rumor to any authentic source. Nevertheless, it created much comment, and is the topic of conversation in all circles.

[The lady mentioned in connection with the Presidential scandal is the daughter of Secretary Frelinghuysen. —ED. GAZETTE.]

Impressive Funeral Services—Fourteen Children Buried.

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.

The funeral services over the bodies of fourteen of the fifteen victims of the terrible accident at the Fourth street schools took place this morning in the Church of the Most Holy Redeemer. The coffins were taken to the church in fourteen white hearse and carried through two lines of independent rifle companies to the altar rail, in front of which the coffins were laid. Twelve little girls dressed in white and wearing black crape scarfs stood at the heads of the coffins, and 26 girls similarly dressed were ranged along the altar rail. The services were most impressive. On either side of the church there extended an immense crowd of people, filling the sidewalks and roadway, while every widow and rooftop of the populous tenements of the neighborhood were also thronged. Similar throngs of people filled all the streets through which the funeral procession passed on its way to Calvary Cemetery.

FOREIGN TELEGRAPH.

A CANADIAN ROMANCE.

An Adventurer Deludes a Rich Heiress, But Fails to Enjoy the Prize. [ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

MONTREAL, Feb. 21.

Immense sensation is created in Canada by an English adventurer representing himself as the Right Honorable Earl of Cantyre of Cantyre Castle, Scotland, and carrying off an heiress worth $200,000 named Chaffy, only child of the late John Chaffy of the city of Perth, Ontario, a lumber king. It appears that the fellow, whose real name is John George Bruce Allen, who turns out to be the son of a clergyman in Sussex, near London, England, met the young lady in Rome, Italy, and by some means got her history and subsequently her acquaintance. She left the continent for home where she resided with her uncle. Her admirer followed her in haste to the Dominion and then came to Perth. He well supplied himself with money and spent it lavishly. His lordship was received hospitably by his inamorata's friends without the least suspicion of his truthfulness and honor. After remaining a few days he proposed a trip to the Montreal carnival and invited the whole household, including the uncle and aunt of Miss Chaffy and their two daughters. Not content with ordinary conveyance, he chartered a special train, for which he paid $300, and brought his friends here, where he had telegraphed the St. Lawrence to keep a whole suite of private rooms. There was a gay time on the journey and in all rounds of gaiety and amusement. Between 5 and 6 o'clock in the afternoon proceeding the great ball, Lord Cantyre and Miss Chaffy managed to escape the vigilance of the latter's chaperone. The same afternoon a clergyman of the Methodist Church was called upon at his residence by a young couple who asked him to make them man and wife. They were accompanied by a lawyer and produced a license drawn up in proper form. The man stated that the lady was from the country. The ceremony was performed, the lawyer and another acting as witnesses. The gentleman signed his name to the register as John George Bruce Allen, and the newly-married pair then took themselves off. All the parties to this hasty union were rewarded by large fees. When the time came for departure to the ball, Lord Cantyre and wife refused to accompany the party, making some slight excuse for thus changing their minds. Next day the whole party returned to Perth, his Lordship engaging a parlor car for their comfort. He left no debts behind, being well prepared, apparently, to carry out his scheme successfully. On returning to Perth something came out which aroused the suspicions of a friend of the lady, who applied to Lord Lorne in Ottawa about his countryman. The announcement came immediately that no such title was known in the British peerage as Cantyre and that the party must be a swindler and robber. In the explanation that followed a document came forth relating about the secret marriage here, and caused such an uproar among the lady's friends that they were inclined to lynch him. The impostor departed, and the family has arrived here to make inquiries and have found through the lawyers that the knot was tied, but it was done through false representations. The bride agrees to discard him now that she knows he is not a real lord.

OLEOMARGARINE.

An Important Industry Being Vigorously Pushed.

A RIVAL OF REAL COWS' BUTTER.

How Fat is Made Into a Wholesome Article of Food.

Since the establishment of the Mege Pacific Commercial Company's Oleomargarine Butter Works at San Francisco this article of food is receiving very considerable attention from dairymen, and, in fact, all classes of people, its appearance in the San Francisco market was met with a strong prejudice which the company have found difficult to overcome. But, notwithstanding this, they have constructed extensive works in South San Francisco, costing $100,000. L. P. Drexler, formerly of Virginia City, is the President of the company and owns a large block of the stock. So confident is Mr. Drexler of the ultimate success of this enterprise that he is freely investing his money in the project, and will undoubtedly reap a handsome return in time. He is very earnest in the work he is engaged in, and is devoting the greater portion of his time to the care of that branch of his many enterprises.

Upon invitation of Mr. Drexler, a GAZETTE representative visited the factory last week and was made acquainted with the process of manufacture of this, to the Pacific Coast, new article of commerce. The works are situated in South San Francisco, and as one drives across Long bridge and observes the sea gulls pull from the sand, at low tide, every description of filthy offal, from the hoof of a bullock to the horn, his stomach is not toned up to any safe degree for investigating fat of any kind; and when you turn into the street of Butchertown, the stench from the many abattoirs caps the climax. As we drive along through the mud and slum the air is thick enough to scoop up in a pile.

"That four-story building at the head of this street is our factory," said Mr. Drexler. The GAZETTE said nothing, but "Great guns! Let us go back to pure air and let bull butter severely alone," was what he thought. The smell is enough to take the hair off your head, and the thought of eating anything from that portion of the busy metropolis is quite enough. Another block passed and you are over your trouble. When you enter the company's large office rooms and notice the busy clerks at work, the idea is suggested that the manufacture of oleomargarine is a very important industry, and must be pushing its way into the markets of the world in spite of public prejudices. A short description of the factory, the method of handling the fats and a general idea of how it is made may not be uninteresting to Nevadans.

The selected fats from the cauli, paunch, and small intestines of the beeves are taken from the abattoirs to the factory every evening. The fat, after being slightly salted, is thrown into large vats of pure water, where it is left until the following morning, when the water is drawn off and the fat is washed perfectly clean, all the salt and impurities being removed; then it is elevated to the top story and placed on a long white table conveniently situated to three small machines called "hashers," not unlike a sausage cutter. The fat is cut into pieces small enough to go through the hasher hopper and is received by a series of knives with aspiral motion, revolving at a high rate of speed in an iron cylinder. This process completely disintegrates the fat. From the hasher it drops into a large iron cauldron, jacked, where the steam is turned in and the melting and first separation of butter compounds from the cellular tissues takes place. During disintegration a multer keeps the fat constantly in motion, and it is melted at a temperature of from 103° to 113°. When the fat is thoroughly melted the stirring is suspended, the particles of membrane settle to the bottom, forming what Drexler calls "scrap fat." The oil rises to the top, and is about the color of strained honey. After the separation has taken place a siphon is dropped in and the oil drawn off into kettles holding 1000 pounds, and kept at a temperature of 140° Fah., when a little salt is added, and the tallow or "scrap fat" is conveyed through pipes to the outside of the factory to the tallow works. The butter-oil, after remaining in the kettles on the second floor from four to six hours, is drawn off into large wooden oil tanks lined with galvanized iron, and kept in the press room at an even temperature of 85°, where it rests while the oil is granulating by crystallization of the stearine. The process takes about 36 hours. Two important steps in the butter-making process have thus been completed. The thoroughly-mashed auct has been deprived, first, of the inclosing cellular tissues, and next, of the excess of stearine. This leaves a limpid, amber-colored, perfectly sweet substance, substantially the same as the oil of butter. When cooled this oil, or oleomargarine, has a creamy tint, and melts in the mouth like butter, and has rather a pleasant taste. At this state it may be kept for a long time without risk of becoming rancid. The company barrel large quantities of the oil for shipment east, and it finds a ready market in nearly all parts of the world. Switzerland, Italy, France, England and Germany use immense quantities of it for culinary purposes. All the oil used for the manufacture of butter for home consumption is barreled and shipped away.

When the process is completed the refined fat is next pressed, when the excess of crystallized stearine is removed by straining under a hydraulic pressure of 5,000 pounds. To do this the fat is set in wooden moulds or boxes holding two pounds each and put into a canvas package for the press. When the press is filled with these two-pound packages it is subjected to steadily increasing pressure, under which the fluid oil flows out until the stearine cakes are left dry and hard. From the press the oil is conveyed to the churns, through pipes kept warm by steam. After it is put into the churns 100 pounds of pure cow's milk is added to every 400 pounds of butter oil and the churn is run at 135 revolutions per minute and kept at a temperature of 70°. The churns are made of block-tin and round a hollow tin shaft conveying fresh air through a blower to the bottom of the milk and oil, thus regulating the temperature. After churning for 35 minutes a little coloring is added, giving the mixture a rich yellow tint. Then the churns are run ten minutes longer, and a large box of finely cut ice is rolled up under the faucet and the gate opened. The butter comes out not much thicker than milk, but the moment it comes in contact with the ice it thickens to the consistency of butter and in fact is butter. Men mix the fine-lace and butter with iron forks until the churn is empty and the ice melted. From this it is run into the moulding room and all the water and "buttermilk" is worked out and the butter salted, moulded into rolls, stamped "Oleomargarine" and packed in boxes ready for market. The company put it up in 25, 50 and 100 pound firkins and in one and two pound rolls for retail use. They use the finest grade of English salt for which they pay $20 per ton.

They are now making 1,150 pounds a day of butter and 1,000 pounds of oil. San Francisco consumes about 300 pound a day and the rest is sent to Arizona and other hot climates. The butter seems to be all they claim for it—a good, wholesome article of food, healthful and clean, and will become a very important article of commerce.

The California Legislature is trying to legislate oleomargarine out of the market, and the Nevada Assembly has passed a similar measure, but from present indications it will be a difficult matter. If oleomargarine is a clean, healthful and desirable article for family consumption it will eventually overcome prejudice and find a ready and profitable sale. They sell it for what it is and so long as they do no one can find fault.

Starving Cattle.

Frank Snapp informs the Silver State that cattle are dying of hunger along the railroad in western Nebraska and Wyoming. The snow is deep and the cattle crowd on the track, which is kept clear, and it is not unusual to see from ten to twenty head of dead cattle at a section house, or wherever there happens to be a place where the snow has been cleared off. Stock men were sending hay to different places along the road to feed their starving herds. The snow was quite deep; there was nothing for cattle to eat where they were not fed hay, and the loss from hunger must be very considerable.

A Hint for Housekeepers.

A Welshman, near Milwaukee, who has on his premises twenty-two marten-boxes, each fastened to the top of a stake, says their welcome and happy occupants not only prey on insects that would spoil his trees and fruit, but "destroy millions of flies"—so many, in fact, that his house, wholly without screen at windows and doors, is less infested than those of his neighbors, who use these obstructions, but fail to encourage the birds.

Comstockers at the Bay.

The Quaker Dairy restaurant in San Francisco, last Sunday morning at breakfast hour looked very much like a Virginia eating house. At one table were seated Judge Rising and family, at another Hank Smith and family, and at other tables sat Bill Garhart, Al. Waters, Ogden Hiles, Tom Watson, Dr. Spaulding, formerly of the Comstock, Lawyer Mitchell and one or two more old Virginians.

A Friend of Agriculture.

The Carson Index says: The GAZETTE has been a constant and strong advocate of the proposition to create in our State agricultural resources which should make it comparable to others in wealth and population.

A magnificent paper is issued to-day. It is full of very interesting matter—telegraph, editorial, local news and selections, and the price of subscription is but a trifle. Send it to your friends.

IN MEMORIAM.

Odd Fellows' Resolutions on the Death of A. S. Hewlet.

At a regular meeting of Reno Lodge, No. 19, I. O. O. F. February 15, 1883, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, In the province of the Divine Ruler of the universe, the Supreme Ruler of all things has been pleased to take from our midst our beloved brother, A. S. Hewlet, a member of this Lodge; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in their said bereavement we recognize the work of our Father's hand, and we bow submissively to His will and say "Thy will be done."

Resolved, That in the death of our cherished brother, the Lodge has lost an ardent, zealous, and honored member, one who was deeply imbued with the principles of our beloved Order.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the wife and relatives of our deceased brother, and that as a mark of esteem we cherish that memory by draping our charter in mourning for the period of thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, be presented to the family of our deceased brother, and that they be published in the Nevada State Journal and RENO EVENING GAZETTE.

TRUCKEE ITEMS.

Scraps of Interest From Our Neighbor in the Hills.

Gleaned from the Republican of Feb. 21st.

Work was commenced on Schaffer's dam this week.

Camp 18 has broken up for the present, and many of the lumbermen are resting in Truckee.

There is no more delightful weather anywhere than Truckee has enjoyed the major part of this week.

The road to Sierra Valley is said to be in good condition. The driving of cattle broke it at once after the snow.

In six weeks more the Sierra Nevada will be populated with thousands of tourists.

The white fish are running in the river now and bite eagerly.

Mr. Walker caught a nice mess of them last night at the dam.

E. J. Joy and W. M. Phillips are said to have closed a big contract with Stein, of Lake Tahoe, to furnish logs.

All the principal roads are pretty well broken, and the mail comes regularly from the different points. The last few warm days has packed the snow, and the sleighing is superb.

Water in the Well.

Mr. Chapin of White Plains informed a GAZETTE reporter this morning that the artesian well was down a thousand feet and would have been 1,100 feet but for the fact that boulders have bothered them. He has good water at 800 feet, and it rises to the top of the ground, but there is salt water higher up which mixes up with the good water and will have to be cut off some way.

Ladies are the Best Judges.

On all matters connected with the toilet, they have decided that SOZODONT is the best. They will say: "When a woman will, she will, and you may depend on it; when she won't, she won't, there's an end on't." This accounts for the popularity of SOZODONT.
